Issue Date: January 20, 2017

Goodbye 2016, Hello 2017!

Happy New Year, everyone! The IES-APA Board got together for our annual board retreat earlier this month to discuss ideas, activities, and workshops to make this year better than the last! We've got a lot in store for you all and hope to see your faces and hear your voices throughout this year at the events and through social media.

Please make sure to follow us on Instagram at @apa_inlandempire and Twitter at @IES_apa. We'll get our Facebook up and running again soon and our board reports on our website as well. Don't forget to hashtag us with #iesapa and you may be featured on our social media posts!

TE-55 Parking Management for Sustainable Development (Online Course)

Parking management holds the key to achieving local land use, transportation, and sustainability objectives. Effective parking management increases the efficiency with which parking is used, reducing the need for added parking construction, improving customer satisfaction, and reducing congestion. This online workshop provides a method for developing strategic parking management measures that fit the local context. It reviews the range of management methods available, such as pricing, shared parking, and district management, and the shows how to put those strategies into action.

Cal Poly Pomona Professor Rick Willson is leading an online course on parking management through UC Berkeley's Tech Transfer. You will learn how to develop and implement a parking management plan that matches the local context with best-practice examples from California and beyond. Such a parking management plan supports local sustainability, economic development, and livability goals.

This course grants 0.8 CEUs and 8 AICP CM credits. (AICP CMs pending approval)

OpenAQ

Check this out! OpenAQ is an open source, real-time air pollution website, that aggregates data from around the world. The impact of air pollution on human health and the economy is a massive injustice to our civilization. The data is available for repurposing into other development platforms, giving programmers the ability to create their own application/interface using the same dataset. OpenAQ is a tool we all can utilize in opening up the world's air quality data for everyone!

Blog Section

A new category on the site under NEWS & EVENTS has been added for blog entries to share our stories with one another of the Planning world. Please feel free to read!

Blog Entries:

As working professionals and students within the Planning and Development field, we are granted opportunities to be involved within our communities, outside our agencies, and with State and National APA members around us. We all have so much to say yet don't often get a chance to share what we've learned and experienced in one breath. Our blog section will be devoted for us as board members AND you as section members to share your thoughts and experiences. In the age of social media, micro-blogging, and instant photo sharing - sometimes good old storytelling brings us closer together to understand the world around us. Hopefully you enjoy these blog entries as we wish to continue doing what we do best as planners - telling the story.

Share Your Story:

To have your story posted on the IES-APA.org website and within our Newsletter, please email it in either MSWord or PDF format to Admin@IES-APA.org.
